

Pictures from November 25, the day to eliminate violence against women in Turkey, Bakûr and Rojava:

In numerous cities across Turkey and Kurdistan thousands of women staged demonstrations against patriarchal violence. Communist women were an active part of the mobilizations and strengthened the struggle for women's revolution which targets private property as the material basis of patriarchy. We present a small selection of the year's demonstrations which took place despite repression and pandemic:

Thousands of women gathered on the evening of November 25 for a demonstration in Istanbul organized by the Platform for November 25. On the banner women wrote: "Our voice shall echo. We are on the streets for each other and rebel against the violence of the male state". The fascist police had to give up their attempt to block the demonstration after they encountered the protest of the women. Women carried the name tags and pictures of imprisoned representatives of the women's liberation struggle and of murdered women like Gülistan Doku, Nadira Kadirova and Ipek Er demanding accountability for femicides.

Following a call from the Dicle Women's Platform, hundreds of women gathered in Amed, Bakûr, declaring their rejection of a state that rejects women. The rally, which was surrounded by police, called for women to resist male and state violence and for women's self defense.

In several cities in northern and eastern Syria, women rallied against violence against women and called for the fight against the occupation attacks of the fascist Turkish state. In the demonstrations, in which the Revolutionary Communist Women (JKS) participated, the defense of the Rojava Revolution with all its achievements was declared the main task of the women.
